Tocqueville mentions war and the ascription of the mind of service of the soldier [with only sixty pages left in the book afterwhich I plan to read _I have not decided_] a preliminary book review of _I have not decided_ is notably less than important and I have mixed feelings about reading the book altogether what really gathered my initial interest afore considering reading _I have not decided_ was I have not read the book yet the title alone has me consider my noncelebratory attitude to mediocrity and indecision and there must be a thing to a published book regardless the title or it would not be published [eh] [question] nevertheless _I have not decided_ as a systemic conversation may be alarmable to one not having asked a question however and curious otherwise to listen in to the pseudonym'd author and a speculative notion of conversation without object

I have not decided as success to tocqueville's thoughts of war service and formalization of an idea of policy and indoctrination of proper service training and service itself may be observational and related to his own war service ideal

I have not decided should be alright afterwhich I plan to read something james michener possibly tribal poland twelve hundreds
